Q: What causes a fireworks sound when ignition starts? Why does the sound of a firework go from a really quiet to full crescendo? My best guess is that it's the ignition of the rocket propellant that causes the change. This video explains, but I'm still not sure how the ignition propels the sound:

A: There are two waves that make up the acoustic signature of a fireworks rocket. The first is the wind that carries the sound and it's this that the rocket triggers. It compresses the air that surrounds it to form a pressure wave. The second is the release of the hot gas. As the rocket's gas clouds move through the surrounding air, they create a shockwave. This shockwave breaks the surrounding air into tiny particles. Because the surrounding air has been compressed, this air is very hot. As the gas cools it's now much denser, which gives the shockwave more mass and so causes a louder sound.

1. Field of the Invention This invention relates to a process for the production of a high quality crystalline zeolite having a unique, high silica-to-alumina ratio, as well as to the use of such zeolite for various hydrocarbon conversion processes.
2. Description of the Prior Art Zeolitic

materials, both natural and synthetic, have been demonstrated in the past to have catalytic properties for various types of hydrocarbon conversions. Certain zeolitic materials are ordered, porous crystalline aluminosilicates having a definite crystalline structure as determined by X-ray diffraction, within which there are a large number of smaller cavities which may be interconnected by a number of still smaller channels or pores. These cavities and pores are uniform in size within a specific zeolitic material. Since the dimensions of these pores are such as to accept for adsorption molecules of certain dimensions while rejecting those of larger dimensions, these materials have come to be known as "molecular sieves" and are utilized in a variety of ways to take advantage of these properties. Such molecular sieves, both
