Q: Focusing on an item in the list? I have an iOS application that displays a table in a UITableView. The user can select a row and the row will perform an action. I know how I would do this in a web application, but I am relatively new to iOS development and it is taking me a little while to figure out how to do it. How would I allow the user to select a row? Once they have selected a row, what would I need to do to make a button go to the next page of the table and focus on that item (e.g. make it the selected row)?

A: You have some options. OPTION 1: You could just create a separate UITableViewController and just give the table a single cell view with a button (which is not the currently selected row) I would recommend option 1, but if you want to use the UITableView datasource methods that would be the way to go. OPTION 2: Your table view should be connected to an IBDelegatedDataSource. The UITableViewDataSource delegate methods are only called when a cell is actually selected. While your data source is receiving the call, you can pass the selected row object to the next view controller. OPTION 3: The best and most common way to handle this is to use custom cell. One of the options would be to use a UIButton in each cell. This way the user could click the button and go to the next view controller without you having to keep track of the row. OPTION 4: With more recent versions of iOS (like 5.0) you could use the UITableViewCell's didSelectRowAtIndexPath method. This gives you greater control over when it fires and the indexPath.

Q: How to check if apache mod_rewrite is enabled on server? Is there any method to check if mod_rewrite is enabled on current Apache instance?

A: Check with this command: `php -a` If this is available, then you have mod_rewrite enabled. A
