The in-app experience is also shared between the three apps. Whether you are a photographer or a graphic designer, Photoshop Engineering Manager Mark Macon tells Digital Trends, "we're excited to be bringing this experience to more people and empowering them to create across touch devices, including mobile and the web. Adobe's partnership with Apple and its initiatives to support broader hardware diversity, open industry standards, and flexible software APIs have been critical to enabling us to do this." "Being in the cloud allows us to leverage powerful new cloud-based infrastructures for the development of new tools, and to both test tools in real time and focus our engineering teams on areas that best benefit our customers," Macon adds. "We also have a deeper focus on our connected devices that allow us to continue to create the best experiences for you across a broad range of devices, including smartphones, tablets, and computers." Adobe's latest photo editing software brings new features into the mix, including deep subject descriptors, new painting capabilities and a new MACRO tool. The new limit for a single photo Macro is 500KB which is is a big improvement over the previous maximum of 1mb pushed by the 2020 version as well as apps from other competitors.
