Q: How to use LaTeX3's \ifcase environment in ConTeXt? Is there a way to use the \ifcase environment from LaTeX3 in ConTeXt? (I'm using ConTeXt MKIV.) For example, if I wanted to write something like this in LaTeX: \toprule \ifboolexp{>}{1}{0} \fi I'd like to achieve the same effect in ConTeXt without defining a new environment. A: You can do something very similar by using the \definecase and \definecases macros and by redefining the standard \iffalse... \fi directives to work with a list of integers. You still need to make sure that the right conditions are met, though. Here are some examples: \definecase: True/False \definecases: {True: False, False: True} A: This is something I wrote in the past. The idea is to use a new macro called \ifcase and to use it to identify cases. To use it, you write \ifcasefib \toprule \ifboolexp{>}{1}{0} \fi All you need to do to make this work is to define the conditional forms (\ifboolexp{...}) and a suitable \fi. In my example, I used the standard, but you might want to set up some other test. You probably want to give this a try and see what's going on for yourself. Be careful with environments, though, because ConTeXt is not very good at figuring out when it should be in an environment. Q: Dynamically change the number of row in a DataTable I'm working with asp.net, C# and SQL. I have a problem, I want to fill a DataTable dynamically without change the number of row, but, I don't know if I can do that if the number of row in the database will change, I want
